Soil profile	The vineyards in which this wine grows offer an ideal terroir for distinctive lower Austrian varieties such as Blauburger and Blauer Portugieser. Here, the loess soil shows a great amount of chalk. This is beneficial for the development of wines with crystal-clear fruit aroma. This blend grows on a southern slope, 300 metres above sea level.
Tasting Notes	This blend of the venerable varieties Blauer Portugieser and Blauburger combines class and charm. Not only violet colour that reminds one of sour cherries can be seen, but also tints of red. As regards smell, this wine offers aromas of long-established varieties that should not fade into obscurity. A harmony of cherries and black currant with a pleasant silkiness can be smelled. Slightly cooled, the Cuvée exquisite of the winery Waldschütz shows that these varieties should not be underestimated. On the contrary, this wine convinces with its fruitiness, lightness and freshness. It is pure joy to taste a glass of this stylish wine and to remember the irresistible aroma of sour cherries that is still present in the long finish.
